POST GRADUATE DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY

Post Graduate Curriculum and Syllabus

M. A. HISTORY

For 2019 Admission Onwards

Preface

The syllabus appended herewith is the product of workshop conducted for revising and restructuring the curriculum for the postgraduate programme in History of Maharaja's College, Ernakulam as part of implementing autonomy. Post graduate programme in history is designed with a view to equip the students with adequate conceptual and theoretical base to understand and assess the developments around them. The program is devised in such a way that the student is introduced to key national and international issues routed in the past and imparts the modern scientific concepts on history in a comprehensive manner. Promoting a positive understanding of India's shared cultural heritage and fostering secular, humane and progressive outlook are among the major objectives of teaching history. The syllabus will provide ample opportunities to the students to enrich their perceptions of the world around and it will develop ideas and attitudes which are necessary for acquiring a thorough historical knowledge in a critical and analytical manner.

The Board of Studies examined thoroughly the running syllabus and decided to incorporate recent developments and trends in historical research. It also decided to co-opt some of the existing courses with adequate modifications by considering the availability of time and cognitive aspects of the learners. It has given due importance to latest debates, theories and discussions related to the broad areas of Indian history with a view to combine both analytical and interpretative aspects. Wide variety of courses related with Indian history will naturally enable the learner to master and acquire a deeper knowledge in it. Introduction of a course related with historiography of Kerala will enable the student to identify the strength and weakness of historical studies related with Kerala's past and will equip them to concentrate on needy areas and problems while pursuing higher studies. Papers related with world history are revised to make it more inclusive and global in perspective. The board has attempted to make a fine tuning of some existing courses while revising others to make syllabus of PG programme more challenging, to sharpen student's minds and capable of enhancing their cognitive faculty, intellectual competence and academic originality in the respective discipline. The papers designed are relevant and useful for the student in the context of the academic enhancement and career building at the national and international levels.

Transforming the study of history more attractive and meaningful without losing its spirit is one of the most challenging tasks that the academicians in this domain face today. In this mission the views of expert academics, teachers and young scholars have been solicited and included in the fresh syllabus. It was done with a broader intention of making students aware of the new avenues of the discipline of History

The main objective is to provide a global outlook and a secular orientation to the students in the changing world. It shall offer unlimited opportunities to students in future for instance in higher studies, and research. Above all, these learning outcomes will create desired attitudinal change and necessary qualitative ingredients to build up a responsible citizenship.

I would like to express my sincere gratitude to all the members of Board of Studies and Department, Mr. Lukmanul Hakeem.K, the coordinator of the Syllabus Restructuring Workshop and subject experts who have cooperated and helped us in this endeavour in various ways.

History of Gender Relations in India

The Course intends to introduce the idea of making departures in conventional history making to enable writing on gender relations in India. This project will entail not an attempt at inclusion but of employing fresh methodologies like the standpoint methodology for producing knowledge on gendered lives differently. The term gender relations, employed in the place of women, will provide accommodation for women and other marginalised genders as much as possible. Another key idea is of intersectionalities where gendered lives are not assumed to be uniform or monolithic but as realities that are criss-crossed with other identities such as caste, class, religion, adivasi identity, sexual orientations, etc. The focus is on making it a transformatory knowledge where teaching, learning and self reflections of teacher and taught are subject to re examination. The teaching learning process should ideally depart from the lecture method and shift to discussing each of the readings. Rather than teaching modules, familiarisation with existing writing should be attempted through readings and discussions. Readings may also form part of assignments.

Module I: Why a History of Gender Relations?

Patriarchy, casteism, elitism and the problems of exclusion- problematic relations of gender with history- attempting to write a history of gender- feminist theory in aid- themes for knowledge making – social reproduction- methodologies- methods of research- emotional realm and qualitative data- unstructured interviews.

Select Problems in Indian Environmental History

The paper attempts to look at the history of Indian environment with a focus on the forest history of the region as a spring board. Understanding historiography is essential for reaching to the roots of the problem and therefore it is included in the first module. Colonial, post colonial and neo colonial perspectives are sign posted through the works of Brandis, Stebbing, Ribbentrop, Gadgil, Guha, David Arnold, Richard Grove and Ajay Skaria. The emergence of state control in natural resources is included in the second module, to understand the diametrically opposite arguments posed by Gadgil – Guha School and the new Cambridge school. How was India explored, documented and exploited is the concern of the third module, where the student will be introduced to the specific site of forests and contestations over it. A post graduate student needs to critically examine the inextricable linkages of natural resource appropriation between the colonial and post colonial Indian scenario, which forms the issues discussed in the fourth module.
